

Loss in the First Year & Beyond

Journaling

Keeping a Personal Journal

The systematic use of an ongoing diary or journal can be one of the most useful ways to maintain self-development. A thoughtfully done journal can provide a structure to promote paying closer attention to our lives and encouraging development, and evolution in our understanding of self and others.

Writing fosters an inner reflection and can chart day by day journeys evoking cognitive and emotional stimulation, growth of personal coping skills and self-awareness, which many otherwise seek from the outside world.

Over time you will find that your writing has allowed you to effectively define problem areas, work through problems and bring about resolution and personal growth.

As you continue to move into the future, your journal can offer a document that can be referred back to when you encounter a similar problem or you are asked to help a friend or loved one with a problem that you can relate to.

Writing by hand can also improve memory, relieve stress, inspire creativity and feel meditative...just to name a few.

The Outcome of Journal Writing

You may find it helpful to work through your thoughts about your loved one by writing down your feelings in a journal or in a letter.

If you choose to write a letter to the person who died, it can allow you to express your thoughts and feelings in a more direct way. Then, after you have written letter and are ready to let it go, you can take it out to the beach in bottle, put it afloat in one of your loved ones favorite spots on a lake, burn it sacredly, or bury it somewhere meaningful etc.

Choose one or several of the ideas that you can relate to, or simply start at the top of the list and work your way down. These topics are simply ideas to help you get started and come up with your own that are more specific to your personal situation and the unique relationship you shared with your loved one.

Ideas for Journal Writing

A few ideas to get you started on your writing:

- Pull from a special memory that you have about your loved one.
- Share what you miss the most about your loved one and the relationship you shared.
- When you might be struggling with a decision and the person gone is whom you would normally ask – ask them anyway.
- Experiences that you are so grateful you got to share, and maybe one or two you wish you had been able to share but never got the chance.
- What you have recognized being the hardest to deal with in regards to your loss.
- Ways you recognize how your loved one continues to live on; in you, in their children, in experiences you have, things in nature that remind you of them, randomly hearing their favorite song, etc.
- Special ways and things you do that keep your loved one alive, create new traditions, for example: remember something they may have mentioned wanting to try and try it for them, if they brought a tradition to your relationship that may have been compromised out considering bringing it back.
